Dutch Schultz's 1931 mugshot

ABOUT DUTCH SCHULTZ

A gangster of legendary import and initiative, Dutch Schultz, rose out of a ghetto in The Bronx to build a criminal operation so strong it would rankle the Five Families of Italy.

Dutch was a born mobster, and did his first time at age 18 for breaking and entering. Sensing in Prohibition the perfect opportunity to expand his enterprise, he became a bootlegger and garnered attention from both gangsters and law enforcement for his criminal prowess.

As a racketeer, Dutch was driven, fearless, brazen—and eventually found himself in the crosshairs of famed U.S. Attorney Thomas Dewey, sparking legal troubles that caused him to move his operation from New York City to Newark, NJ.

In an attempt to evade prosecution, Dutch sought the National Crime Syndicate's help in having Dewey assassinated, but they declined, fearing a massive crackdown. When Dutch decided he would take Dewey out himself, the Commission of the American Mafia agreed he had become more trouble than treasure.

Mafia hitmen ended Dutch Schultz's life on October 23, 1935 at the Palace Chop House restaurant at 12 East Park Street in Newark—just a stone's throw from where you're sitting right now. You're in the middle of Dutch's old stomping grounds, hence the name of this restaurant.

We've taken inspiration from this legendary rule-breaker to design a menu that's as classic as it is daring. At Dutch's, we strive to make every dish so good you could call it criminal. Cheers!
